Industry Speaks...

In eastern India, apart from IIT, Kharagpur, the electronics engineering departments of Indian School of Mines, Dhanbad, IIT-Guwahati and Jadavpur University have been efficiently producing quality engineers to cope up with the industry need —Arun Ghosh, managing director, Hita Power

We visit campuses regularly and recruit freshers. We mainly target such institutions as IITs, NITs and BITS. We are quite satisfied with the quality of students they churn out —C.P. Ravikumar, director-University Relation, Texas Instruments

We often hire electronics engineers from PSG College of Technology-Coimbatore, PES Institute of Technology-Bangalore, Manipal Institute of Technology and VIT-Vellore —S. Somashekar, director-technical, S.M. Electronic Technologies

We are satisfied with the performance of the electronics engineering passouts from Anna University —Anil Kumar Challyil, technical service manager, Arrow Electronics

We prefer to hire electronics engineers from Sardar Vallabhbhai National Institute of Technology-Surat, Dhirubhai Ambani Institute of Infocom Technology-Gandhinagar and Nirma Institute of Technology-Ahmedabad —C.B. Panchal, technical director, Modern Power

In the past, we used to recruit electronics engineers from reputed government institutes like IIT-Delhi, IIT-Kanpur and Delhi College of Engineering. But for the last two years, we have also been recruiting from reputed private institutes like Jaypee University of Information Technology and Amity School of Engineering —V.K. Sharma, director (project), TCIL

Besides the government institutes like IIT-Bombay and Government College of Engineering-Pune, private institutes like VJTI-Mumbai, Sardar Patel College of Engineering-Mumbai and VIT-Pune are good sources of talent for the electronics engineering industry —N. Chandramohan, country manager, SMT Division, Juki India
