bracket for middle- and senior-level managers has been adjusted. This indicates that companies are now gradually getting their middle-management strategy right and using salary as a tool to retain employees for better leadership roles. Companies seem to have become selective about the kinds of employees they need to retain and have accordingly adjusted the salary quotient. The growth in an average salary for a given position has been nominal in fiscal 2008-09 in comparison to the previous year. In some cases, firms, in fact, reported a decline in salary levels. Availability of surplus manpower as well as negligible profits due to economic sluggishness were the underlying reasons.

Expected pay package

Pay packages offered to electronics professionals are proportional to their experience and hierarchy. These also vary with the educational background of the employee, with degree holders attracting higher salary levels within the same band than diploma holders with similar experience.

In fiscal 2008-09, due to a dip in the average salary growth, entry-level employees more or less remained in the same salary bands. Take the youngest group of employees, for instance, who have less than one year of experience; 68 per cent of this group continued to draw salaries under Rs 200,000 per annum and 18 per cent stayed within the Rs 200,000-Rs 500,000 bracket. Very few firms hired freshers, with most, such as Cadence Design Systems, providing free internships at best.

However, at entry-level, candidates with less than two years of experience typically receive between Rs 100,000-Rs 500,000 per annum as CTC. Employees receiving Rs 200,000-Rs 500,000 per annum get increments as their experience levels increase. In a few cases, the CTC
