

electronica and productronica India 2009

Shows Silver Lining to Electronics Domain

A view of electronica and productronica India 2009 held in Bengaluru

■ EFY BUREAU

With the electronics industry still recovering from the recession pangs, industry insiders predicted electronica and productronica India 2009 to be a gloomy affair. However, with over 10,300 visitors, 4,600 focused attendees, 400 conference delegates and 825 exhibitors, the Indian chapter of electronica and productronica 2009 proved that it is one of the most important electronics trade fairs in India.

Klaus Dittich, managing director, Messe Muenchen International (MMI), the organisers of the exhibition, says, "The high volumes of trade visitors and the atmosphere of this trade fair is of international standards, and electronica and productronica India is on its way to becoming one of the most anticipated shows in the electronics industry." Adding on, Manmeet Sabarwal, managing director, MMI India, says, "The successful debut of electronica and productronica 2009 amidst a resurgent Indian economy puts the smile back on the electronics industry's face. MMI India will do everything needed for the emergence of India's electronics industry as a strong player on the global scene."

Held from September 8-11, 2009, electronica and productronica India 2009 exhibited a diverse and complete range of electronics products. The event witnessed the participation of manufacturers and service providers in the field of components like semi-conductors, sensors, relays, switches, interconnection technology, resistors, capacitors, coils and transformers, motors/drives, cables, assemblies and subsystems, ED/EDA and test and measurement technology, display and power supplies. In the fields of production equipment, the technologies on display were for packaging, material processing, manufacturing equipment and logistics for PCBs, cable processing, soldering, etc.

Global feet remained firm

Despite the recession, the event saw a large number of global players present to tap the Indian market. "We are present here to show our commitment to the Indian market. We see this as a platform for branding and showcasing our name and commitment. We have got leads in the past and we have succeeded in transforming them into business last year. This year too, we had good response from the customers. We received good number of queries," says Erik van de Ven, senior director, business support and marketing, Asia Pacific, Philips.

"With adequate publicity of the show, we were able to reach out to the right people. The response to the show has been better than expected and we are glad we participated," says Yeo L.C, chief representative, Murata Electronics, Singapore.

International players from 25 countries including China, Germany, US, Singapore and Taiwan were present. Some international exhibitors saw electronica India 2009 as an opportunity to spread their wings in India while others were present to showcase their strong foothold.

"As an international player, we have strong presence in the north Indian market but now we are looking at moving to south India. electronica India 2009 was a good opportunity to build customer relationship and showcase our prime products in India," says