RIM to give out Blackberry 10 prototypes to developers

Research in Motion (RIM) has announced that it will give developers prototypes of the new Blackberry 10 smartphone operating system in May. The prototype, called Blackberry 10 Dev Alpha, will run a modified version of the Playbook OS, meant to help developers design apps for Blackberry 10 smartphone.

"It's not the final hardware or OS, it's a device to help developers get started with designing for what's coming," RIM said in a statement. The decision is part of a move to create hype for the new platform.

Only developers attending Blackberry 10 Jam event will receive the prototype, which would not be available commercially.

Cadence announces annual student design contest

Cadence Design Systems has announced the launch of Cadence Design Contest 2012—the annual competition for undergraduate and graduate engineering students. Now in its seventh year, the contest aims at fostering the spirit of innovation and realisation of ideas among engineering students in India.

The contest invites participation from B.Tech and M.Tech students from over 250 Indian institutions that use Cadence technologies. The winners and runner-ups in both categories will receive a cash prize. The winners will also get an opportunity to present their award-winning projects at CDNLive India—annual user conference of Cadence. The last date for submissions is 13th April.
