

from 2011 spending of $36 billion.

"Businesses are increasingly looking to IT to help support the challenges of rapid growth for customer support, supply chain management, optimising business processes or helping to drive innovation in the business. These demands are being placed while the IT infrastructure within many enterprises may not be entirely in place. IT is also in transition from being viewed as a back-office support function to a frontline business-focused function," said Derry Finkeldey, principal research analyst at Gartner.

The retail industry is expected to achieve the strongest growth in percentage terms in 2012, where IT spending is forecast to grow 11.8 per cent.

Smartphones driving handset sales

The Indian mobile handset market closed 2011 with an annual growth rate of 14.1 per cent, achieving a total volume of 182 million handsets—according to an ABI Research study. The study identifies the drivers for growth of the handset market in India and provides forecasts for handset shipments, 3G subscriptions and smartphone market size.

Looking forward, the Indian handset market is estimated to grow at a CAGR of 10.7 per cent during 2011-2017, with total handset volume expected to reach 335 million units by 2017. The market is currently led by Nokia (37.2 per cent market share), followed by Samsung (14.9 per cent), G'Five (7.5 per cent) and Micromax (5.8 per cent).

"The smartphone segment will be the fastest-growing segment and will continue to outpace the overall handset market for the foreseeable future," says Kevin Burden, vice president and practice director, mobile devices. With a CAGR of 40 per cent, the smartphone segment is expected to reach 97.2 million units by 2017, accounting for 29 per cent of the total handset volume.
