

"But the growth curve is very steep indeed."

Video sharing will be a small portion of this revenue, while video telephony, video messaging and video-on-demand will account for the lion's share.

Consumers' appetite for mobile entertainment, sparked by the availability of 3G networks, is one of the main drivers for this market. This will only increase as MNOs move to 4G.

Blu-ray player sales to more than double this year

Worldwide Blu-ray player shipments are expected to more than double between 2009 and the end of 2010. ABI Research forecasts continued growth next year also, leading to a total of more than 62.5 million shipments in 2011.

In North America alone, Blu-ray players are expected to reach almost 18 per cent penetration among TV-owning households, up from just over 7 per cent in 2009.

According to industry analyst Mike Inouye, "Larger, fixed-location devices such as Blu-ray players and flat-panel TVs are enjoying rapid adoption relative to many classes of small, portable devices. Specifically, portable gaming devices are leveling out, while we are seeing actual declines in shipments of portable audio players. Digital picture frames are showing only mild growth, and compact digital camera shipments are declining in North America and Japan, though they continue modest growth elsewhere."

Linux will dominate tablet PC market

Microsoft may be focussing on the tablet market big time, but if analysts are to be believed, the software giant may get tough competition from Linux yet again! According to ABI Research, the Linux-powered tablet PCs will dominate the market with a share of 62 per cent by the year 2015.

Google's Android and Chrome OS will lead the way, followed by the joint Intel and Nokia MeeGo effort and the
