Security has always been in the limelight. However, in the last decade, we have seen some major security lapses during 26/11 terrorists attack in Mumbai and serial bomb blasts in major cities of India. Well, that is history; but are we safe even today in our daily environment—office, home, airport, bank, business complex, malls? I guess no! With changing lifestyle and standard of living, we require security at home as well as outdoors. Security has become a must everywhere we go. So let's take up these three areas—homes, offices and automobiles—and find out what you should look for before buying a security system for each of them.

Security for homes

Security systems for homes are in demand. Today, these security systems find use not only in builder apartments but also in independent houses. The kind of security system required in your house depends on where your house is located, whether it is an independent house or a builder apartment, on which floor the security system is to be installed, how big is the house and so on.

The different security products that are available for homes include intruder alarms, auto diallers, door-phones with camera, electromagnetic locks, remote panic alarms and video
