considered as the last part of the full detection system, which alerts neighbours, you or the police. Alarms can be silent or use loudspeakers to squeal obnoxiously across a neighbourhood.

Types of home security systems

There are two main kinds of systems—hard-wire and wireless. Hard-wire systems are more complex involving cords and wires.

A hard-wire system is considered more permanent and is slightly more reliable. But installation should be carried out by a professional alarm installer, which will drive the cost up. Expansion of a hard-wired system at a later time will require calling the installer which again will be at an additional cost. Unlike a wireless system,
